Easily calculate beats per minute, bpm, in a song or music That's also the case for fictional characters (like Yoda) that are portrayed as very young, even though they're not physically young, because this suits the story better. I believe you can either be old-fashioned, stay true to the source material, or very young, stay true to the source material. Please correct me if I'm wrong (I don't know much about it). If an actor can't act his age convincingly, say, in his 20s, the show isn't going to want to put up with that. In fact, the more realistic/realistic an actor looks, the better he'll be able to portray a character of his/her age. I doubt that Mr. Stormare works with prosthetics. I'm guessing that they're simply working their way up into a suitable aesthetic for the character. I do believe that with the older actors' first acting gigs, they were not working with prosthetics. But don't get me wrong, the newer actors don't work with prosthetics either. They also don't work with a body double. And I don't doubt that Stormare uses a body double as well. I don't really understand why a body double needs to be an exact replica of the actor, and why the actor couldn't play the role without a body double. For some actors, the character's voice and other sound effects, or the qualities of the performance itself, are more important than the face. Or, the exact makeup of the face itself isn't important. I wouldn't say that Lucas did the best job at distinguishing the actors, but they were pretty good. I don't think it's a mystery at all. It makes sense that, given the scale of the production and the number of characters they have to have on the set, they simply can't afford to invest in each actor's distinct look. Even for actors like Carrie Fisher who spend a lot of their time in makeup anyway, it would be unrealistic to expect her and Mark Hamill to be wearing identical masks for every single shot. (and even if they were, that would look all sorts of weird.) This is a big reason why I never felt they captured Han and Leia's relationship on screen - it wasn't because they were actors with mismatched styles. It was because of how similar Han and Leia were to look. Even in the 09e8f5149f
